

Before the
INTER-AMERICAN COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Jessica Gonzales,
In her individual capacity and on behalf of her deceased daughters,
Katheryn, Rebecca, and Leslie Gonzales

vs.

The United States of America

Case No. 12.626

Written Comments of Amici Curiae

November 13, 2008

PRESENTED BY:

Lucy Simpson
Kirsten Matoy Carlson
Indian Law Resource Center
602 North Ewing
Helena, MT 59601
Tel: (406) 449-2006

Jacqueline Agtuca
Terri Henry
Sacred Circle National Resource Center to End Violence Against Native Women
722 St. Joseph Street
Rapid City, SD 57701
Tel: 1-877-733-7623

- I. Interest of Amici Curiae
- II. Summary of Argument
- III. Argument
 - a. Domestic and Sexual Violence Committed Against Indian Women Is a National Crisis in the United States.
 - b. United States Law Systematically Denies Indian Women Sexually or Physically Assaulted on Indian Lands the Full Protection of Legal Remedies from Domestic and Sexual Violence.
 - i. United States Law Denies Indian Women Criminal Legal Recourse.
 - 1. United States Law Denies Indian Women the Protection of Tribal Criminal Prosecution of Non-Indian Perpetrators of Violence.
 - 2. United States Law Denies Indian Women Appropriate Criminal Recourse by Limiting the Sentencing Authority of Indian Nations.
 - 3. United States Federal Prosecutors Deny Indian Women Criminal Recourse By Declining to Prosecute Cases Arising on Indian Lands.
 - 4. United States State Prosecutors Deny Indian Women Criminal Recourse By Declining to Prosecute Cases Arising on Indian Lands.
 - ii. United States Law Denies Indian Women Civil Legal Recourse by Failing to Require the Enforcement of Protection Orders.
 - 1. The United States' Failure to Fully Implement the Violence Against Women Act Leaves Indian Women Without Judicial Recourse.
 - 2. The United States Supreme Court's Decision in Gonzales Denies Indian Women Legal Recourse.
 - c. The United States' Failure to Protect Indian Women From Violence Violates their Rights under the American Declaration.
 - i. The United States is Responsible for the Epidemic of Violence Against Indian Women Because it has Failed to Prevent such Violence and Act with Due Diligence to Protect Them.
 - ii. The United States Violates Indian Women's Rights to Life and Security of the Person.
 - iii. The United States Does Not Provide Indian Women with an Effective Judicial Remedy as Required by the American Declaration.
- IV. Conclusion and Recommendations
- V. Appendix (Statements of Amici Curiae)

I. Interest of Amici Curiae

Amici are non-profit organizations and tribal governments actively working to end the epidemic of violence against American Indian and Alaska Native women (“Indian women”)¹ in the United States. Amici support the brief of Jessica Gonzales because all women and children, Indian and non-Indian alike, in the United States have the right to be protected from violence and to have protection orders enforced by law enforcement officials.² Under United States decisional law, women are denied the right to have protection orders enforced by the police.³ Left with great discretionary power, law enforcement officials may, and frequently do, disregard violations of protection orders. This failure to enforce protection orders leaves women unprotected and vulnerable to ongoing violence.

United States law undermining the integrity of domestic violence protection orders has far reaching effects beyond the Gonzales case. Even though this case did not arise on Indian lands or involve a tribal protection order, it has vast implications for Indian women and the enforcement of tribal protection orders by state law enforcement officials. Amici write in support of the arguments made by the petitioner to provide additional evidence of the consistent and widespread pattern of police failure to enforce domestic violence protection orders. Amici reiterate that the United States has failed to act with due diligence to fulfill its obligations under the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man and to prevent violence against women. More specifically, Amici write to educate the Commission about the epidemic of domestic violence and sexual assault against Indian women in the United States and the particularly devastating effect of United States laws on Indian women. The Commission must be aware of this particular impact of the Gonzales decision in the United States because it endangers the lives of Indian women and leaves them without effective judicial recourse against their abusers.

¹ In this brief, the term “Indian” is used to include members of the 562 federally recognized Indian nations and Alaska Native villages.

² Jessica Gonzales identifies as Native American, but even if she did not, the rule established by the U.S. Supreme Court in Town of Castle Rock, Colo. v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748 (2005), extends to all women in the United States, including Indian women.

³ See Town of Castle Rock, Colo. v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748 (2005).

II. Summary of Argument

Indian women face greater rates of domestic violence and sexual assault than any other group in the United States.⁴ Despite this horrific fact, United States law has diminished the authority of Indian nations to safeguard the lives of Indian women. The jurisdictional limitations placed by the United States on Indian nations have created a systemic barrier that denies Indian women access to justice and prevents them from living free of violence or the threat of violence. As a result, civil protection orders are of increased importance to Indian women because often the only recourse an Indian woman has against her abuser is a civil protection order. United States laws undermining the enforcement of civil protection orders leave Indian women vulnerable to violence and violate their rights to life, security, and effective judicial remedies under international law.

Protection orders are a critical component of the civil legal remedies available to protect Indian women from future violence. Protection orders are of heightened importance to Indian women seeking protection from violence because the United States has left Indian women without adequate criminal remedies to the violence committed against them. While the United States has diminished tribal criminal authority, Indian nations can issue civil protection orders to prevent future violence, award temporary custody of children, and resolve other urgent issues. Tribal protection orders have the potential to save the lives of Indian women, and often do so, when they are enforced by local law enforcement. Because Indian women enter and leave tribal jurisdiction continuously to work, bank, go to school, and for many other reasons, a woman's life may depend on her tribal court order of protection being enforced by state courts.

⁴ See, e.g., P.L. No. 109-162 § 901 (2006).

The Gonzales decision undermining the integrity of civil protection orders is especially pernicious to Indian women because of the limitations placed by the United States upon tribal criminal authority to protect women from perpetrators of domestic and sexual violence. The Gonzales decision allows law enforcement the discretion to choose not to enforce domestic violence protection orders. This decision limiting the enforceability of protection orders strengthens the systemic barriers preventing Indian women from accessing legal remedies essential to preventing abuse and living free of violence. The decision furthers the legal barriers that violate the rights of Indian women to life, security, and effective judicial remedies under international law and thus, leaves them vulnerable to violence.

III. Argument

a. Domestic and Sexual Violence Committed Against Indian Women Is a National Crisis in the United States.

Violence against Indian women in the United States has reached epidemic proportions. Violence against Indian women greatly exceeds that of any other population in the United States.⁵ Every hour of every day an Indian woman is the victim of sexual and physical abuse.⁶ Indian women are 2 ½ times more likely to experience violence than other women in the United States.⁷ The statistics of the United States Department of Justice report that 1 in 3 Indian women will be raped⁸ and that 3 in 5 will be physically assaulted.⁹ Indian women are also stalked at a rate more than double that of any other population.¹⁰

⁵ Id.

⁶ Brief of Amici Curiae The National Network to End Domestic Violence, Sacred Circle, National Resource Center to End Violence Against Native Women, et al. in Support of Respondents at 4, Plains Commerce Bank v. Long Family Land & Cattle Co., Inc., et al., No. 07-411 (2008) [hereinafter "Long Brief"].

⁷ See Steven W. Perry, U.S. Dep't of Justice, American Indians and Crime 8 (2004).

Indicative of the severity of the violence committed on a daily basis against Indian women is that in 2004 homicide was one of the leading causes of death for Indian women, outranking heart disease, cancer, diabetes and other such illnesses.¹¹ Intentional homicide is the third leading cause of death for Indian girls and women between the ages of ten and 24. Suicide is the second leading cause of death for Indian women and girls between the ages of ten and 34. Many such suicides may be in reality cases of unresolved homicides. Some counties within the United States have rates of murder against Indian women that are over ten times the national average.¹²

Indian women were not traditionally the victims of such violence. As a coalition of women's organizations recently explained to the United States Supreme Court,

This extraordinarily high rate of violence against Native women has no roots in the traditional cultures of Indian nations. To the contrary, written historical records documenting Europeans' first impressions of relationships between Indian women and men indicate that women enjoyed great authority and respect in Indian societies. Traditional teachings handed down by oral historians of Indian nations confirm these reports—unlike their European counterparts, Indian women frequently had greater authority than men over the home, activities associated with trade, and property. Many Indian nations held the mother's role to be culturally and structurally central to their societies. Reflecting these social norms

⁸ See Patricia Tjaden & Nancy Thoenne, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Full Report of the Prevalence, Incidence, and Consequences of Violence Against Women: Findings From the National Violence Against Women Survey 22 ex. 7 (2000).

⁹ See id.

¹⁰ See U.S. Dep't of Justice, Domestic Violence and Stalking, The Second Annual Report to Congress Under the Violence Against Women Act (1997); U.S. Dep't of Justice, Stalking and Domestic Violence, The Third Annual Report to Congress Under the Violence Against Women Act (1998).

¹¹ See Melonie Heron, Center for Disease Control, Deaths: Leading Causes for 2004, National Vital Statistics Reports, Vol. 56, Number 5 (2004). In 2007, a total of 10,007 Indian people were listed as missing by the National Crime Information Center. See NCIC Missing Person and Unidentified Person Statistics for 2007, U.S. Dep't of Justice (2008).

¹² Ronet Bachman, et al, Violence Against American Indian and Alaska Native Women and the Criminal Justice Response: What is Known (National Institute of Justice 2007).

and the spiritual beliefs underlying them, Native women traditionally experienced a high degree of safety.¹³

The national crisis of violence against Indian women is widely recognized and since 2003 the National Congress of American Indians has prioritized addressing this issue.¹⁴ The violence is understood as an outcome of the lived experience of Indigenous women where colonization continues in a contemporary context.¹⁵ The United States Congress also recognized the epidemic of violence against Indian women by including a specific title within the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (“VAWA”) named Safety for Indian Women.¹⁶ The crisis is systemic in nature and is the product of United States law and policies preventing access to justice and safety for Indian women.

- b. United States Law Systematically Denies Indian Women Sexually or Physically Assaulted on Indian Lands the Full Protection of Legal Remedies from Domestic and Sexual Violence.

There are 562 federally recognized Indian nations in the United States, including more than 200 Alaska Native villages, that retain sovereign authority over their lands and peoples.¹⁷

“Indian tribes have long been recognized as sovereign entities, ‘possessing attributes of

¹³ Long Brief, supra note 6, at 4-5 (citing Jacqueline Agtuca, Beloved Women: Life Givers, Caretakers, Teachers of Future Generations 5-6 in Sharing Our Stories of Survival, Native Women Surviving Violence (2007)). See also Office on Violence Against Native Women and the National Center on Full Faith and Credit, Violence Against Native Women: A Guide for Practitioner Action 1 (2006) [hereinafter “Guide for Practitioners”].

¹⁴ The National Congress of American Indians is the oldest and largest member organization of Indian Nations in the United States. During the national conventions of 2003 and again 2008, it recognized the frequency and severity of violence committed against Indian women by the adoption of resolutions supporting reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (PHX-03-034 and PHX-08-15). It further adopted a resolution requesting a full United States Congressional hearing on the incidence of sex offenses and the medical response to these crimes committed against Native women (DEN-07-039).

¹⁵ Roe Bubar, Native Women Left Behind, Sexual Assault in Tribal Communities: Results from a National Pilot Study of Sexual Assault (2006).

¹⁶ P.L. No. 109-162 § 901 (2006).

¹⁷ Indian Entities Recognized and Eligible to Receive Services from the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs, 73 Fed. Reg. 18,553 (Apr. 4, 2008).

sovereignty over both their members and their territory.’”¹⁸ Indian nations possess inherent power “necessary to protect tribal self-government [and] to control internal relations.”¹⁹ Indian nations also possess such additional authority as Congress may expressly delegate.²⁰ The basis for tribal authority is their inherent need to determine tribal citizenship, to regulate relations among their citizens, and to legislate and tax activities on Indian lands, including certain activities by non-citizens.²¹

The limitations placed by United States law on the inherent jurisdictional authority Indian nations have over their own territory are a key factor creating and perpetuating the disproportionate violence against Indian women.²² The United States has imposed a jurisdictional maze on Indian nations that leaves Indian women without recourse for the violence committed against them.²³ Unlike other women in the United States, Indian women often do not have the choice to pursue criminal relief against their perpetrators. United States law has made criminal relief either unavailable or inadequate.

i. United States Law Denies Indian Women Criminal Legal Recourse.

Under United States law, criminal jurisdiction on Indian lands is divided among federal, tribal, and state governments. Which government has jurisdiction depends on the location of the crime, the type of crime, the race of the perpetrator, and the race of the victim. These legally created jurisdictional determinants restrict the ability of Indian nations to provide a meaningful ¹⁸ Babbitt Ford, Inc. v. Navajo Indian Tribe, 710 F.2d 587, 591 (9th Cir. 1983) (quoting United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 323 (1978)). See also Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. 515 (1832); Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U.S. 1 (1831).

¹⁹ Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544, 564 (1981).

²⁰ Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438 (1997).

²¹ Plains Commerce Bank v. Long Family Land & Cattle Co., Inc. 554 U.S. ____ (2008), available at [<http://supreme.justia.com/us/554/07-411/>].

²² Indian tribal governments are pre-existing sovereigns with their own inherent authority, including jurisdictional authority over their territory. Cohen’s Handbook on Federal Indian Law §4.01[1][a] (Nell Newton ed. 2005). They exist independent of the United States Constitution, and the Constitution does not apply to them. See, e.g., Vine Deloria, Jr. & David E. Wilkins, Tribes, Treaties, and Constitutional Tribulations 26 (1999).

²³ For jurisdictional purposes, United States law defines an “Indian” as any individual who is a member of an Indian tribe, or is an Alaska Native and a member of an Alaska Native Regional Corporation. See, e.g., 25 U.S.C. § 1903.

remedy for women seeking safety within the jurisdiction of an Indian nation. Further, these limitations prevent Indian women from accessing protection and remedies under Indigenous justice from their respective tribal governments.

1. United States Law Denies Indian Women the Protection of Tribal Criminal Prosecution of Non-Indian Perpetrators of Violence.

United States laws greatly restrict the ability of Indian nations to provide a meaningful remedy when women are physically and sexual assaulted within tribal lands. Indian nations have no criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians, and may not prosecute or punish non-Indians committing crimes on their lands.²⁴ These United States imposed restrictions on tribal criminal jurisdiction have grave consequences for the safety of Indian women, and leave them without criminal recourse when abused by non-Indians.

United States Department of Justice reports reflect a high number of inter-racial crimes, with white or black offenders committing 88% of all violent victimizations of Indian women from 1992 to 2001.²⁵ Nearly 4 of 5 Indian victims of sexual assault described the offender as white.²⁶ Three out of 4 Indian victims of intimate violence identified the offender as a person of a different race.²⁷

Non-Indians marry and enter into consensual relationships with Indian women. As a result of these intimate consensual relationships, non-Indians live, work, father children, and use medical and other services within the jurisdiction of Indian nations. These non-Indian perpetrators knowingly enter and leave tribal jurisdiction often with the intent of committing acts ²⁴ Oliphant v. Suquamish, 435 U.S. 191 (1978); United States v. McBratney, 104 U.S. 621 (1881) (implying courts should acknowledge the decline of tribal nations and the doctrine of tribal sovereignty).

²⁵ See Steven W. Perry, U.S. Dep't of Justice, American Indians and Crime, 1992-2002, at 8 (2004).

²⁶ See id. at 9.

²⁷ Lawrence A. Greenfield & Steven K. Smith, U.S. Dep't of Justice, American Indians and Crime 8 (1999) (noting that among American Indian victims, "75% of the intimate victimizations and 25% of the family victimizations involved an offender of a different race," a much higher percentage than among victims of all races as a whole.).

of violence against Indian women.²⁸ Indian nations, however, do not have criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians.

Indian women are raped, beaten, stalked, kidnapped, murdered, and victims of other crimes by non-Indian offenders. Many of these crimes are the result of a pattern of violent victimization due to domestic violence. Non-Indians that are strangers also prey upon and commit violent crimes against Indian women. These offenders are aware of the lack of tribal jurisdiction and the vulnerability of Indian women.²⁹ As citizens of tribal nations victimized by non-Indians, these Indian women have no criminal recourse under tribal law from their tribal government.

Tribal criminal jurisdiction over such crimes is denied due to a limitation imposed by the United States Supreme Court on tribal courts in 1978.³⁰ The Court ruled that Indian nations lack the authority to impose criminal sanctions on non-Indian citizens of the United States that commit crimes on Indian lands.³¹ For the last thirty years Indian nations have been denied criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians and the authority to prosecute non-Indians committing crimes on Indian lands. When a non-Indian commits physical or sexual violence against an Indian woman on Indian lands, the Indian nation does not have the authority to prosecute the offender.

²⁸ Steven W. Perry, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Census of Tribal Justice Agencies in Indian Country, 2002, at 57 (2005) (stating that the Saginaw Chippewa Indian Tribe of Michigan reported 500 criminal cases filed against non-Indians in 2001).

²⁹ United States Civil Rights Commission, A Quiet Crisis: Federal Funding and Unmet Needs in Indian Country 67 (July 2003) ("According to one legal expert, the federal government has not always honored this responsibility seriously, and Native Americans have become easy crime targets. Many offenders know that they can get away with committing minor offenses against Native Americans because the federal government is not likely to spend resources pursuing these crimes.") (citing Victor H. Holcomb, Prosecution of Non-Indians for Non-Serious Offenses Committed Against Indians in Indian Country, 75 N.D. L. Rev. 766 (1999)), available at [<http://www.usccr.gov/pubs/na0703/na0204.pdf>] [hereinafter "A Quiet Crisis"].

³⁰ Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

³¹ Id.

Either the United States, or in cases where the United States has delegated this authority to the state, the state government has the authority to prosecute non-Indian offenders committing crimes on Indian lands. As the United States Civil Rights Commission pointed out, the problem is that the Oliphant decision did not place any responsibility on the United States government or its delegates to prosecute non-Indian offenders on Indian lands. In the words of the Commission, “[T]he decision only dealt with limitations to tribal power, not the federal responsibility to compensate for those limitations based on the trust relationship. The Court did not require the federal government to protect tribes or prosecute non-Indian offenders who commit crimes on tribal lands.”³² Even though the United States has a trust responsibility to prosecute offenders on Indian lands, it does not have a legal obligation to do so and cannot be held legally accountable for not doing so. If the United States or the state government does not prosecute the non-Indian offender, then the offender goes free without facing any legal consequences for his actions, and the Indian woman is denied any criminal recourse against her abuser.

2. United States Law Denies Indian Women Appropriate Criminal Recourse by Limiting the Sentencing Authority of Indian Nations.

United States laws also limit tribal authority over Indian perpetrators on their own lands.³³ Indian nations may prosecute crimes committed by Indians,³⁴ but United States law restricts tribal criminal penalties to one year in prison and a fine of no more than $5000.³⁵ When an Indian commits violence against an Indian woman, the Indian nation can prosecute the ³² A Quiet Crisis, supra note 29, at 67 (italics in original).

³³ 18 U.S.C. §§ 1152, 1162 (providing for federal jurisdiction over crimes in Indian country).

³⁴ 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1152, 1153; see also United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375 (1886) (upholding the constitutionality of the Major Crimes Act).

³⁵ Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968, 25 U.S.C. § 1301 et seq.

offender, but the woman is still denied an effective remedy because the tribal court can only sentence the offender to a maximum of one year in prison.

This sentencing limitation is unjust given the serious nature of violent crimes against Indian women. The sentencing limitation on tribal courts for serious violent offenses stands in stark contrast to that of such crimes occurring in non-tribal jurisdictions. A congressional Sentencing Commission comparing federal and state penalties for sexual assault found the following:

Of the 50 states, two territories, and the District of Columbia surveyed, 20 (37.0%) provide for a maximum term of life imprisonment for rape. Twenty-four (45.3%) have a maximum penalty of 20 years or more. The federal system provides for a maximum punishment of life imprisonment without possibility of parole for offenders convicted of aggravated sexual assault.

Several states enhance rape sentences for defendants with prior convictions. States that do not have habitual or repeat sex offender provisions often have a general habitual offender statute that enhances the available term of imprisonment depending on the number of prior felony or violent felony convictions.³⁶

The disparate contrast in the sentencing authority of tribal courts for sexual assault of one year per offense from that of state or federal courts is a contributing factor to the public myth that rape of Indian women is not a serious offense. The societal impact of this inequality contributes to the increased risk level Indian women must live with everyday. The one year per offense sentencing limitation denies Indian women appropriate remedies under criminal law.

3. United States Federal Prosecutors Deny Indian Women Criminal Recourse By Declining to Prosecute Cases Arising on Indian Lands.

In the United States, government research indicates that the violent victimization of Indian women occurs at more than double the rate of any other population of women; the federal rate for prosecution of such crimes, however, is far lower.³⁷ United States federal prosecutors share concurrent criminal jurisdiction with approximately one-half of all Indian nations.³⁸ In these jurisdictions, only United States prosecutors have felony jurisdiction to impose a sentence of more than one year per offense.³⁹ Unfortunately, the limited data available shows that more often than not United States federal prosecutors fail to prosecute violent crimes committed against Indian women on Indian lands.⁴⁰ This failure to prosecute denies Indian women appropriate criminal recourse against their abusers.⁴¹

³⁶ United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Analysis of Penalties for Federal Rape Cases 7-8 (March 1995), available at [http://www.ussc.gov/r_congress/FEDRAPE.PDF].

United States federal prosecutors do not release official reports detailing the crimes they choose not to prosecute.⁴² The only public data on the federal prosecution of sexual assaults

³⁷ See, e.g., Amnesty International, Maze of Injustice: The Failure to Protect Indigenous Women from Sexual Violence in the USA (April 2007), available at [www.amnesty.org.ru/library/pdf/AMR510352007ENGLISH/$File/AMR5103507.pdf] (finding that there is a clear pattern of discriminatory and inadequate law enforcement in cases of violence against Indian women) [hereinafter “Maze of Injustice”]; The Effects of Gender in the Federal Courts: The Final Report of the Ninth Circuit Gender Bias Task Force: The Quality of Justice, 67 S. Cal. L. Rev. 745, 906-911 (1994) (concluding that crimes against women are under-prosecuted in Indian country as the difficulties of prosecution in general, coupled with traditions of non-involvement by law enforcement in spousal abuse, make federal and state enforcement more difficult); Gavin Clarkson, Reservations Beyond the Law, Los Angeles Times (August 3, 2007), at [http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-oe-clarkson3aug03,0,1867347.story] (explaining that United States Attorneys decline to prosecute crimes in Indian country nearly twice as often as those committed outside Indian country).

Federal and state governments also “provide significantly fewer resources for policing in Indian Country and Alaska Native villages than are provided to comparable non-Native communities.” Maze of Injustice, supra, at 36.

³⁸ Carol Goldberg & Duane Champagne, Is Public Law 280 Fit for the Twenty-First Century? Some Data at Last, 38 Conn. L. Rev. 697, 697 (2006).

³⁹ 18 U.S.C. § 1152.

⁴⁰ During 1998, violent offenses constituted less than 7% of all investigations and 6% of all cases charged by United States prosecutors. Domestic and sexual violence cases committed against Indian women were just a portion of these percentages. See Compendium of Federal Justice Statistics, 1998, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics 25 (May 2000) available at [http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/bjs/pub/pdf/cfjs98.pdf].

⁴¹ The U.S. Attorney General has the authority to increase the priority given to address violence against women in the U.S. Department of Justice. The application of this authority is inconsistent from Presidential administration to Presidential administration. For instance, a plan to address sexual assault, developed in consultation with Indian tribes was shelved by the Bush Administration.

⁴² The United States Senate Committee on Indian Affairs conducted an “Oversight Hearing to Examine Federal Declinations to Prosecute Crimes in Indian Country” on September 18, 2008. Federal United States Attorney for North Dakota Drew Wrigley refused to provide data about the crimes his office fails to prosecute. He stated that providing the information would mislead the public and jeopardize criminal investigations. United States Attorney General Michael Mukasey affirmed Wrigley’s reasons for not providing the information. Mary Claire Jalonick, DOJ Will Not Provide Indian Crime Data, News From Indian Country (Sept. 2008), available at [http://indiancountrynews.net/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=4641&Itemid=33].

occurring within Indian reservations is found in a 1993 report mandated by Congress on federal sentencing guidelines. That report found that only 69 of the 42,013 federal cases sentenced under the guidelines that year involved rape conduct.⁴³ These statistics reflect that the vast majority of sexual assault cases occurring on Indian lands were not federally prosecuted in 1993. No information is available that the rate of prosecution of such crimes increased in other years.⁴⁴

A recent university study indicates that United States prosecutors fail to prosecute 62% of criminal cases and 75% of rape and sexual assault cases occurring on Indian lands.⁴⁵ The study reports that from 2005 to 2007 United States Attorneys failed to prosecute 50% of murder and manslaughter cases, 58% percent of serious assaults, and 76% percent of sex crimes involving adults committed on Indian lands.⁴⁶ These statistics reflect the reality that even when Indian women report domestic or sexual violence to law enforcement agencies, it is highly unlikely that these crimes will be prosecuted.

This failure to prosecute has devastating consequences for women seeking safety from violent perpetrators. Reporting such a crime increases the risk of retaliation by the offender. Many Indian women know that federal prosecutors decline the majority of cases from Indian lands and thus, decide not to report physical and sexual violence. Because Indian women cannot rely on the criminal justice system to prosecute and punish their abusers, many carry the tremendous burden of securing safety for themselves and their children. These women often are forced to flee their tribal lands for urban areas that are unfamiliar and lack any tribal support mechanisms.⁴⁷

⁴³ Report to Congress: Analysis of Penalties for Federal Rape Cases, supra note 36, at 3.

⁴⁴ In 1998, a total of 746 rape cases were investigated, 307 were prosecuted and 430 declined by the U.S. attorneys. It is unknown how many of these cases were committed against Indian women on Indian lands. Id. at 26.

⁴⁵ Tribal Law and Order Act of 2008, S. 3320, 110th Cong. (2008); Jalonick, supra note 42.

⁴⁶ Jalonick, supra note 42.

⁴⁷ Many of these urban centers are dangerous and have high rates of violence against Indian women.

In cases of domestic violence, the criminal justice system's failure to provide Indian women with appropriate recourse against their abusers is particularly atrocious in that violence is known to increase in both frequency and severity over time. Indian and non-Indian abusers quickly learn that this systemic failure means that they will face no criminal consequences for their violent behavior. Abusers are thus free to terrorize and Indian women are forced to live in on-going fear of continued violence. While every state and territory within the United States has enacted laws making domestic violence a crime, the federal government has not.

The United States' failure to prosecute perpetrators of violent crimes has grave consequences for Indian women. This failure to prosecute cases functionally locks Indian women out of the judicial system and the appropriate felony level sentencing for such crimes. According to Dr. Lisak, a leading researcher on sexual assault predators in the United States, "Predators attack the unprotected. The failure to prosecute sex crimes against American Indian women is an invitation to prey with impunity."⁴⁸

4. United States State Prosecutors Deny Indian Women Criminal Recourse By Declining to Prosecute Cases Arising on Indian Lands.

Under the United States Constitution, governmental relations with Indian nations are the function of the federal government.⁴⁹ In violation of this responsibility and without consultation with Indian nations, the United States Congress has delegated criminal jurisdiction over Indians on Indian lands to some states.⁵⁰ While this delegation of authority did not alter the authority of ⁴⁸ David Lisak & P.M. Miller, Repeat Rape and Multiple Offending Among Undetected Rapists, 17 Violence and Victims 1 (2002).

⁴⁹ U.S. Const. Art. 1, § 8.

⁵⁰ P.L. 280, § 7, 67 Stat. 588, 590 (1953). For information on jurisdiction under P.L. 280, see Carole E. Goldberg-Ambrose, Public Law 280: State Jurisdiction Over Reservation Indians, 22 U.C.L.A. Law Review 535-94 (1975).

Indian nations in those states, it has had a devastating impact on the development of tribal justice systems and the safety of Indian women.⁵¹

In these states, the state government has the criminal jurisdiction normally exercised by the federal government over crimes on Indian lands. The state government has exclusive jurisdiction over non-Indians and felony jurisdiction over Indians. Accordingly, when a non-Indian commits physical or sexual violence against an Indian woman on Indian lands, the state has exclusive jurisdiction over the offender. When an Indian commits physical or sexual violence against an Indian women on Indian lands, only the state government has the criminal authority to impose a sentence of more than one year.

Like the United States federal government, states often fail to prosecute criminal cases occurring within Indian lands.⁵² The criticisms of United States prosecutors and their failure to prosecute violent crimes, thus, also apply to state prosecutors. The failure to prosecute crimes occurring on Indian lands, however, is often more acute in these states because they do not receive any additional funding from the United States to handle these cases.⁵³ This often results in the understaffing of police on Indian lands and reluctance on the part of state prosecutors to take cases.

The Alaska state government is a glaring example of state failure to protect Native women.⁵⁴ The rate of violence against Alaska Native women is much higher than the rate of violence in the United States as a whole. Despite this level of violence, over one-third of the 229 Native villages in Alaska have no form of local law enforcement present in their community.

⁵¹ Goldberg & Champagne, supra note 38, at 697.

⁵² Id.

⁵³ Goldberg & Champagne, supra note 38.

⁵⁴ Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie Tribal Government, 522 U.S. 520 (1998). The United States Supreme Court further complicated felony and territorial jurisdiction in Alaska by finding that, with limited exceptions, Indian Country has largely been extinguished in Alaska. Public Law 280 delegated federal criminal jurisdiction over Indians in Indian Country to certain states governments. To the extent Indian Country does not exist in Alaska, concurrent jurisdiction of the State also does not exist.

According to the United States Human Rights Commission, this lack of local law enforcement renders these Alaska villages “‘virtually defenseless to lawbreakers.’”⁵⁵ Despite the full faith and credit provision under VAWA,⁵⁶ the State and state troopers have resisted recognizing and enforcing village orders of protection. In this hostile environment villages have turned to traditional tribal justice remedies such as banishment.⁵⁷ The Alaska State Supreme Court affirmed the right of the villages to banish one of their members for violent behavior and to have state courts and state troopers assist in enforcing these orders.⁵⁸ The State has not and will not ensure the safety of women in the villages.

Further complicating the lack of response by state governments is the denial of access to resources by the United States to Indian nations within these states. As a result, the majority of Indian nations within these states lack the resources to develop tribal criminal justice departments. The combined result of the transfer of federal jurisdiction and the denial of resources has created a vacuum of available law enforcement services.⁵⁹ Thus, many women in need of emergency assistance live in tribal jurisdictions where law enforcement services do not exist.⁶⁰ When a woman is raped or beaten she must defend herself or rely on her family and community for safety.

⁵⁵ A Quiet Crisis, supra note 29, at 76.

⁵⁶ 18 U.S.C. § 2265(a).

⁵⁷ Alaska Native villages traditionally dealt with violent offenders by banishing them.

⁵⁸ Native Village of Perryville Case, No. 3AN-00-12245 (Alaska Super. Ct. Nov. 19, 2003).

⁵⁹ Goldberg & Champagne, supra note 38, at 704.

⁶⁰ A Quiet Crisis, supra note 29, at 76 (noting that “80 percent of the population that received limited or no local police protection are Native.”).

The United States Civil Rights Commission detailed the problem of inadequate law enforcement on Indian lands in the United States. It explained,

Lack of adequate law enforcement has other serious outcomes; Native individuals and communities do not derive the deterrence benefit of an adequate police presence, and the result has been increased criminal behavior and victimization of residents in areas known for inadequate policing. The failure of the federal government to fully acknowledge and remedy policies that have a disproportionately negative effect on a group of people, and to continue following such policies, jeopardizes the safety of the group compared with other Americans and constitutes discrimination.

ii. United States Law Denies Indian Women Civil Legal Recourse by Failing to Require the Enforcement of Protection Orders.

The criminal jurisdictional scheme imposed by the United States on Indian nations leaves Indian women with civil protection orders from tribal courts as their primary recourse against their abusers. United States laws also restrict tribal civil jurisdiction,⁶¹ but Indian nations exercise limited civil jurisdiction, including the authority to issue civil protection orders. Indian nations have the inherent authority to issue civil protection orders to protect both Indian and non-Indian women from domestic abusers on Indian lands.⁶²

Protection orders are critical legal mechanisms that have the ability to save the lives of Indian women. Tribal civil protection orders are of increased importance because the United States has greatly diminished tribal criminal jurisdiction and the primary way that Indian nations can protect Indian and non-Indian women is by issuing civil protection orders against perpetrators of violence in tribal courts. These protection orders, however, are largely useless if they are not enforced by local law enforcement officials.

The United States Congress recognized the importance of tribal court protection orders by requiring that all other courts give these orders full faith and credit in the Violence Against Women Act.⁶³ Congress has also recognized the civil authority of tribal courts to enforce domestic violence protection orders, and impose civil contempt penalties and exclusionary orders

Id.

⁶¹ See, e.g., Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544 (1980). In general, “the inherent sovereign powers of an Indian Tribe do not extend to the activities of non-members of the tribe.” Id. at 565. This principle is “subject to two exceptions: The first exception relates to non-members who enter consensual relationships with the tribe or its members; the second concerns activity that directly affects the tribe’s political integrity, economic security, health, or welfare.” Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438, 446 (1997). Domestic relationships are one of the most common “consensual relations” between Indians and non-Indians.

⁶² Tribal courts can issue domestic violence protection orders for non-Indian women, and several reasons exist for why a non-Indian woman may seek a tribal protection order. For example, the Hopi Indian Tribe is located in two large counties in northeastern Arizona. Non-Indian women living there may seek a protective order from the Hopi Tribal Court because the nearest state court is over one hundred miles away.

⁶³ 18 U.S.C. § 2265(a).

over all persons (Indians and non-Indians) who violate civil domestic violence protection orders within their jurisdiction.⁶⁴

To the limited extent that Indian nations have jurisdiction over perpetrators, they are trying to protect their women from violence.⁶⁵ In the past decade, Indian nations have developed the infrastructure for tribal justice system components to provide safety to women within their jurisdiction. Many Indian nations have developed domestic violence codes.⁶⁶ They have supported personnel and training of tribal law enforcement, tribal courts, prosecutors, and probation officers. Tribal courts have also ordered that offenders enroll in re-education programs, and tribes have supported programs to encourage boys and young men to respect women.⁶⁷ According to Indian women's organizations working to end domestic violence against Indian women, "At the tribal level, efforts are coordinated to create a system of safety for women seeking safety and protection within the tribal jurisdiction."⁶⁸ Tribal courts regularly enter civil protection orders against domestic violence perpetrators.⁶⁹ Tribal law enforcement enforces tribal protection orders on Indian lands.

⁶⁴ Id.

⁶⁵ Historically, Indian Nations honored and respected their women. Physical or sexual abuse against women was not acceptable. When such violence occurred, legal, social and cultural institutions dealt with it immediately and usually through harsh actions such as the banishment of the offender from the community. Some Indian Nations have returned to the practice of banishment as a way to deal with abusers and other violent offenders. See, e.g., Mille Lacs Band Banishes Four Over Violence, at [<http://www.indianz.com/News/2008/011208.asp>].

⁶⁶ See, e.g., Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 15; Melissa Tatum, Law Enforcement Authority in Indian Country, 4 Tribal L.J. 2 (2003/2004). For an example of a tribal domestic violence code, see the Navajo Nation Domestic Abuse Protection Act, IX Navajo Trib. Code § 1601 et seq. (1993).

⁶⁷ See, e.g., Cangleska Inc. Men's Re-Education Program, at [<http://www.cangleska.org/Mens%20program.htm>].

⁶⁸ Long Brief, supra note 6, at 5a.

⁶⁹ The Crow Tribe helped to pilot the Hope Card Project, which is an "attempt to couple law enforcement's need for information about protection orders during incidents involving violations of the orders and the victim's need for police intervention and streamlined services during times of crisis." Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 16. The Hope Card is a small, durable card containing the vital information of the protection order that women can easily carry in a purse or pocket. Id.

Efforts by Indian nations, however, are diluted by a lack of essential resources.⁷⁰ States spends an average of one hundred thirty one dollars per year on each person in providing law enforcement services.⁷¹ The United States spends considerably less per year per individual on law enforcement within tribal jurisdictions.⁷² Many Indian nations have only a few police officers to cover their vast territories.⁷³ For example, within the state of Alaska, eighty Alaska Native Villages lack any form of law enforcement services. An acute lack of resources often limits tribal enforcement of protection orders.⁷⁴ This public safety crisis confronting Indian nations is well documented,⁷⁵ and often attributed to the United States government's failure to provide adequate resources for essential criminal justice services.⁷⁶

Once Indian women leave tribal lands, they must rely on other jurisdictions for the enforcement of their tribal protection orders. If these jurisdictions do not enforce tribal protection orders, then Indian women are left unprotected because no other law enforcement has the authority to enforce the orders. States are primarily responsible for the enforcement of protection orders outside of tribal jurisdictions. Many states, however, do not recognize and ⁷⁰ Indian women are also greatly disadvantaged by the lack of basic services for victims of sexual and physical violence within tribal jurisdictions. There is an acute need for basic education on domestic violence and sexual assault among law enforcement personnel. See, e.g., Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 23-24. Further many health clinics and hospitals on Indian lands do not have rape kits or Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners. Maze of Injustice, supra note 37, at 53-58.

⁷¹ A Quiet Crisis, supra note 29, at 75.

⁷² Id. (“It is estimated that tribes have been 55 and 75 percent of the resources available to non-Indian communities, a figure that is even more exaggerated considering the higher crime rates.”).

⁷³ Id. at 75-76; Law and Order in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. 8 (June 21, 2007) (statement of Chairman Marcus Wells, Jr., Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation) (noting the “catastrophic shortage of law enforcement personnel” on the Reservation due to unfilled Bureau of Indian Affairs police positions).

⁷⁴ Stewart Wakeling, Miriam Jorgensen, Susan Michaelson, Manley Begay, Policing on American Indian Reservations: A Report to the National Institute of Justice, U.S. Dep't of Justice, National Institute of Justice, at vii, July 2001, available at: [<http://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/188095.pdf>].

⁷⁵ See, e.g., Maze of Injustice, supra note 37, at 42; Examining the Prevalence of and Solutions to Stopping Violence Against Indian Women: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (Sept. 27, 2007); Law and Order in Indian Country: Field Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (March 17, 2008); Law and Order in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (May 17, 2007); Law and Order in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (June 21, 2007).

⁷⁶ See generally A Quiet Crisis, supra note 29.

enforce tribal protection orders. For example, in 2003, the State of Alaska instructed state troopers to disobey a state court order recognizing a tribal court protection order and claimed that both orders were illegal.⁷⁷ The Office on Violence Against Women's Violence Against Native Women: A Guide for Practitioner Action explains the many barriers that states have erected to the enforcement of tribal protection orders. It states,

Courts may impose requirements for certification or special seals before a foreign order may be given full faith and credit. Such requirements create additional steps that a battered woman must take for full enforcement of her protection order, erecting additional barriers to her safety. Said requirements for certification or registration are not required by [the Violence Against Women Act]. In fact, to the contrary, VAWA specifically prohibits requirements that create impediments to enforcement outside of the issuing jurisdiction.

Another challenge to the full enforcement of tribal protection orders is the requirement of some states that protection orders be registered with the court in the new jurisdiction before the state will enforce the order. Registration of orders creates barriers for victims. For example, on one reservation in the northern part of the country, it is not uncommon for a survivor to obtain a temporary protection order from her tribal court, and then have to drive to the county courthouse, which is a half-hour away, to have the order registered.⁷⁸

Hostility from state or county law enforcement may also impede the enforcement of tribal protection orders.⁷⁹ Some state agents refuse to enforce protection orders issued by Indian nations because they stereotype Indian women as uncredible and unreliable.

Indian women, unlike other women in the United States, cannot rely on the judicial system to punish their abusers. Effectively left without criminal relief, Indian women frequently must rely on tribal civil protection orders to protect them from continuing violence. Tribal civil protection orders, however, are only good as long as they can be enforced. If an Indian woman cannot get a state to enforce a tribal protection order when her attacker has violated it, she is left without judicial recourse because no other entity can enforce the order in that jurisdiction. In effect, she is unprotected and vulnerable to further attack.

⁷⁷ Sheila Tomey, Trouble in Perryville, Anchorage Daily News (Nov. 3, 2003), available at [<http://dwb.adn.com/front/story/4325477p-4335352c.html>].

⁷⁸ Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 21.

⁷⁹ Id.

The Gonzales decision undermines the limited legal protection that Indian women have under United States law by placing the enforcement of protection orders within the discretion of law enforcement officers. Under the Gonzales decision, United States law does not require state law enforcement to investigate or enforce alleged violations of domestic violence protection orders. Thus, state law enforcement choose whether to enforce these orders, and may always choose not to.⁸⁰ They often choose not to enforce these orders because they face no consequences for not enforcing them. Decisions by local law enforcement leave Indian women vulnerable to ongoing violence by domestic abusers.

1. The United States' Failure to Fully Implement the Violence Against Women Act Leaves Indian Women Without Judicial Recourse.

Congress is acutely aware of the epidemic of violence against Indian women,⁸¹ and enacted Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, which specifically addresses Safety for Indian Women, in response to this national crisis in 2005.⁸² In Title IX, Congress made a specific finding that “Indian tribes require additional criminal justice and victim services resources to respond to violent assaults against women; and the unique legal relationship of the United States to Indian tribes creates a federal trust responsibility to assist tribal governments in ⁸⁰ Gonzales, 545 U.S. at 748.

⁸¹ The 110th Congress has held multiple hearings on the crisis in law enforcement in Indian Country, Law and Order in Indian Country: Field Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (March 17, 2008); Law and Order in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (May 17, 2007); Law and Order in Indian Country: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (June 21, 2007), and one specifically on violence against Indian women. Examining the Prevalence of and Solutions to Stopping Violence Against Indian Women: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (Sept. 27, 2007).

⁸² P.L. No. 109-162 § 901 (2006).

safeguarding the lives of Indian women.”⁸³ These are laudable efforts, but the United States’ failure to fully implement VAWA undermines its ability to address adequately the epidemic of sexual and physical violence against Indian women.

Congress has explicitly recognized the authority and responsibility of both Indian nations and states to hold offenders accountable in addressing the high rates of violence against Indian women in VAWA.⁸⁴ Congress explicitly addressed the enforcement of protection orders in VAWA. First, it mandated the enforcement of tribal protection orders. VAWA unambiguously recognizes Indian nations’ civil jurisdiction to issue protection orders in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.⁸⁵ It mandates that state authorities enforce these orders as if they were their own.⁸⁶ VAWA also seeks to enhance state enforcement of tribal protection orders by permitting Indian law enforcement agencies access to enter and obtain information, including information on protection orders, from the federal crime data systems and by creating a National Tribal Registry for protection orders.⁸⁷

Second, under VAWA, the issuance and enforcement of tribal protection orders gives rise to legal remedies not otherwise available to Indian women. Once a tribal protection order is issued, three federal firearm offenses govern the behavior of the restrained party.⁸⁸ It is a federal ⁸⁴ Congress further acknowledged the acute problem of violence against Indian women when it held hearings on the matter in September 2007. Examining the Prevalence of and Solutions to Stopping Violence Against Indian Women: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 110th Cong. (Sept. 27, 2007).

⁸³ Id.

⁸⁵ 18 U.S.C.A. § 2265(e).

⁸⁶ 18 U.S.C. § 2265(a) (2000) (“Any protection order issued that is consistent with subsection (b) of this section by the court of one State or Indian tribe (the issuing State or Indian tribe) shall be accorded full faith and credit by the court of another State or Indian tribe (the enforcing State or Indian tribe) and enforced as if it were the order of the enforcing State or tribe.”).

Because Congress referred to the enforcement of tribal protection orders by state law enforcement as a matter of full faith and credit, this brief will use that language. This does not mean, however, that Amici concede that full faith and credit rather than principles of comity mandate that states enforce tribal court judgments and orders. Further, Amici note that the United States has never recognized a constitutional or statutory obligation to recognize tribal court orders. See Wilson v. Marchington, 127 F.3d 805 (9th Cir. 1997).

⁸⁷ P.L. No. 109-162 § 905(a).

⁸⁸ Gun Control Act, 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(8)(9).

crime to possess a firearm and/or ammunition while subject to a qualifying protection order⁸⁹ or after conviction of a domestic violence misdemeanor offense in a state, federal, or tribal court.⁹⁰

The penalties for violation of this provision of the federal criminal code are substantial and provide for a maximum sentence of ten years.⁹¹ In 2005, VAWA was amended and now “provides misdemeanor arrest authority for federal officers and tribal specialized officers with reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing domestic violence, dating violence, stalking, or violation of a protection order and has as an element of the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon.”⁹² This increased authority is significant to the everyday safety of Indian women.

In addition, VAWA’s habitual offender provision amends the federal criminal code to impose enhanced criminal penalties on a repeat offender who commits a domestic assault within Indian lands and has a final conviction on at least two separate prior occasions in federal, state, or tribal court for offenses that would be, if subject to federal jurisdiction, an assault, sexual abuse, or serious violent felony against a spouse or intimate partner, or a domestic violence offense.⁹³ Thus, when the violation of a tribal protection order involves an assault, the perpetrator faces enhanced penalties under VAWA.

The United States has failed to fully implement VAWA to the detriment of Indian women. Despite VAWA’s mandate that tribal protection orders be enforced, Indian women still face tremendous obstacles in having their protection orders enforced.⁹⁴ VAWA’s full faith and ⁸⁹ 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(8).

⁹⁰ 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(9).

⁹¹ 18 U.S.C. 922(g).

⁹² Sacred Circle, Restoration of Native Sovereignty, Vol. V at 19 (Sept. 2006); see also P.L. No. 109-162 § 908.

⁹³ Id. at § 909.

⁹⁴ Melissa Tatum, A Jurisdictional Quandary: Challenges Facing Tribal Governments in Implementing the Full Faith and Credit Provisions of the Violence Against Women Acts, 90 Ky. L.J. 123 (2002); Kevin K. Washburn, A Different Kind of Symmetry, 24 N.M. L. Rev. 263 (Spring 2004) (discussing different state approaches to the enforcement of tribal court judgments). For a general discussion of the difficulty of getting domestic violence

credit provisions rely on voluntary compliance. States face no consequences for not following VAWA's mandates regarding tribal court protection orders, and the United States provides little, if any, oversight of VAWA compliance by states regarding full faith and credit. While VAWA's mandates appear straightforward, they "conceal a wealth of complexity" and different states have interpreted them in different ways.⁹⁵ As a result, many state laws do not incorporate the federal mandate in VAWA requiring state law enforcement to enforce tribal protection orders.⁹⁶ Additionally, the United States Department of Justice has yet to issue any training, guidelines, or information on the number of cases being prosecuted under the habitual offender⁹⁷ and firearms provisions.⁹⁸

Nor have Indian nations been provided access to the national registries for protection orders and sex offenders.⁹⁹ The NCAI Taskforce on Violence Against Indian Women and Sacred Circle report

Tribal law enforcement still cannot access the national federal system without the permission of the state in which the tribe is located. Many state governments refuse tribes access through their state systems. . . . some state governments in conflict with federal law do not allow tribal court orders of protection to be entered into their state registry.¹⁰⁰ protection orders enforced in the United States, see Sally F. Goldfarb, Reconceiving Civil Protection Orders for Domestic Violence: Can Law Help End the Abuse Without Ending the Relationship?, 29 Cardozo L. Rev. 1487, 1516 (2008).

⁹⁵ Tatum, supra note 94, at 136.

⁹⁶ Stacy Leeds, Cross-Jurisdictional Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments: A Tribal Court Perspective, 76 N.D. L. Rev. 311, 354 (2000).

⁹⁷ Since passage of the habitual offender provision, 18 U.S.C. § 117, in 2006, only two cases are known to have been prosecuted under this provision. One case in 2007 in Michigan (the defendant had five prior domestic violence convictions in tribal court) and a second case in 2008 in Oregon.

⁹⁸ Id.

⁹⁹ Sacred Circle, Restoration of Native Sovereignty, Vol. IX (Sept. 2008).

¹⁰⁰ Id.

The United States' failure to implement this section of VAWA is devastating for Indian women. Many state law enforcement officials continue to refuse to enforce tribal protection orders because they view them as suspect and cannot verify them through the National registry.¹⁰¹

The only study conducted to date on state enforcement of tribal protection orders found that 27% of the tribal courts that reported instances of non-recognition involved domestic violence orders after the enactment of VAWA.¹⁰² These numbers indicate that the full faith and credit provisions of VAWA are not being implemented, and that state law enforcement officials are not enforcing tribal protection orders. This lack of enforcement undermines the habitual offender and firearms provisions of VAWA because these remedies do not apply unless tribal protection orders are enforced. Despite its intent, VAWA does not appear to be protecting Indian women from ongoing domestic abuse. Rather as the study on state enforcement of tribal orders concluded, "Although Indian women are more likely to experience domestic violence than any other category of citizen, they are not receiving the protection envisioned in Violence Against Women Act."¹⁰³

2. The United States Supreme Court's Decision in Gonzales Denies Indian Women Legal Recourse.

The United States Supreme Court decision in *Town of Castle Rock, Col. v. Gonzales*¹⁰⁴ exacerbates the under-enforcement of domestic violence protection orders in the United States and impedes the ability of Indian women to obtain enforcement of protection orders across jurisdictional boundaries. In Gonzales, the Court held that an individual who has obtained a state-law restraining order does not have a constitutionally protected property interest in having ¹⁰¹ Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 21.

¹⁰² Leeds, supra note 96, at 349-350.

¹⁰³ Id. at 355.

¹⁰⁴ 545 U.S. 748 (2005).

the police enforce the restraining order when they have probable cause to believe it has been violated.¹⁰⁵

The Court's decision in Gonzales has a particularly pernicious impact on Indian women whose primary recourse against their attackers is a civil protection order and who often must rely on state law enforcement to enforce these protection orders against non-Indian perpetrators of domestic violence. As discussed in Part III.b., Indian women do not have the same access to criminal recourse against their abusers as all other women in the United States. Due to the United States' denial of adequate judicial recourse to Indian women survivors of sexual and physical violence, in many instances, protection orders become the sole legal mechanism intervening between an Indian woman and a violent perpetrator. The enforcement of protection orders is, thus, essential to preventing violence against Indian women and should not be considered discretionary.

An order of protection is issued by a court that has considered all of the factors prior to issuance. It is a court and not law enforcement officers that have the authority to deny the order. Allowing law enforcement the discretion to enforce an order jeopardizes the lives of Indian women that may have no other legal recourse. Because state law enforcement apparently will not be held accountable for not enforcing protection orders, they do not have to enforce them. Often, state law enforcement officials do not enforce tribal protection orders. This means the safety of Indian women depends on the unregulated discretion of law enforcement officers and not the rule of law.

The Gonzales decision clearly contradicts federal, state, and tribal laws aimed at reducing violence against women. The decision greatly weakens the already under-implemented full faith and credit provisions of VAWA, by giving state law enforcement the discretion to ignore rather than enforce protection orders. The Gonzales decision gives state law enforcement the discretion and thus authority over the enforcement of tribal and federal law. This tremendous discretion over the enforcement of domestic violence protection orders allows state law enforcement to disrespect the sovereignty of both Indian nations and the United States.

¹⁰⁵ Id. at 768.

The Gonzales decision also undermines several state and tribal laws, which mandate the arrest of violators of domestic violence protection orders.¹⁰⁶ The mandatory nature of these laws addresses historical inaction and bias on the part of law enforcement in responding to domestic violence calls.¹⁰⁷ The Court's interpretation of these laws as not mandatory condones these historically discriminatory practices and allows perpetrators of violence to act with impunity. As the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has pointed out on several occasions, states have an obligation to use all legal means at their disposal to combat human rights violations because "impunity fosters chronic recidivism of human rights violations, and total defenselessness of victims and their relatives."¹⁰⁸

The United States' presentation of the Gonzales case as an isolated case limited to its facts misrepresents its domestic jurisprudence on the enforceability of domestic violence protection orders.¹⁰⁹ The United States relies on two cases to suggest that remedies are available to domestic violence victims who allege a failure to protect by police officers.¹¹⁰ Not only are ¹⁰⁶ For a discussion of state laws requiring mandatory arrest for violators of domestic violence protection orders, see Final Observations Regarding the Merits of the Case for the Petitioner Jessica Gonzales to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Jessica Gonzales, et al. v. United States, Case No. 12.626, at 51 (March 24, 2008).

¹⁰⁷ 545 U.S. at 780 (Stevens, dissenting) (explaining that the Colorado statute that mandates the enforcement of domestic restraining orders upon probable cause of a violation responds to a "crisis of police underenforcement in the domestic violence sphere.") .

¹⁰⁸ IACHR, Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas, OEA/Ser.L/VIII, Jan. 20, 2007, p. 12 (citing Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Loayza Tamayo Case. Reparations (Art. 63(1) American Convention on Human Rights), Judgment of November 27, 1998, para. 170, citing Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., The "Panel Blanca" Case (Paniagua Morales et al.), Judgment of March 8, 1998, para. 173) [hereinafter "Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas"].

¹⁰⁹ Response of the Government of the United States of America to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights Regarding Jessica Gonzales, No. p-1490-05, at p. 14-15.

¹¹⁰ Id.

these lower court cases distinguishable on the facts because they deal with equal protection rather than due process claims,¹¹¹ but one of them has been widely discredited and rarely followed.¹¹² While the United States may believe that constitutional claims are interchangeable, the evidentiary requirements and legal tests for due process and equal protection claims differ substantially.¹¹³ An equal protection claim can only be brought in cases where the state agent treats domestic violence victims as a class differently from other victims. In cases where the state agent simply refuses to enforce a domestic violence protection order, victims are left without judicial recourse. Neither of the cases cited by the United States refute the fact that the highest court in the United States has held that women do not have a constitutional right to have domestic violence protection orders enforced when there is probable cause to believe that the order has been violated.

The Supreme Court in Gonzales has functionally enabled law enforcement to continue discriminatory practices against women and ignore domestic violence protection orders. The Gonzales case shows that law enforcement will not be held accountable for not enforcing protection orders. The Court has undermined the security of Indian women provided by civil protection orders and has sanctioned ongoing domestic violence because perpetrators know that police officers do not have to enforce protection orders.

c. The United States' Failure to Protect Indian Women from Violence Violates their Rights under the American Declaration.

The United States has an affirmative obligation to protect the human rights of Indian women. Within the Inter-American system, member states, including the United States, have a ¹¹¹ Compare Thurman v. City of Torrington, 595 F. Supp. 1521 (D.Ct. 1984) and Fajardo v. County of Los Angeles, 179 F.3d 698 (9th Cir. 1999) with Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748 (2005).

¹¹² Keyciting Thurman on Westlaw indicated that most courts have either distinguished that case or declined to follow it.

¹¹³ See generally Erwin Chemerinsky, Constitutional Law Principles and Policies (2d. ed. 2002).

legal obligation to protect, promote, and ensure the human rights in the American Declaration.¹¹⁴ When nation states fail to act with due diligence in response to acts of violence, they can be held responsible for human rights violations perpetrated by non-state actors.¹¹⁵ The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights considers the American Declaration's provisions in the context of the international and Inter-American human rights systems more broadly. The Commission considers developments in international human rights law since the Declaration was first composed and other relevant rules of international law applicable to member states against which complaints of violations of the Declaration are properly lodged.¹¹⁶

The American Declaration obligates the United States to protect Indian women's rights to life, security of the person, and an effective judicial remedy.¹¹⁷ It also explicitly provides special protection for women and children. In addition to these protections for women and children under the American Declaration, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has recognized Indigenous women as a population particularly vulnerable to violence.¹¹⁸

The Commission should consider the relevant provisions of the recently adopted U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in interpreting the American Declaration. International human rights law "has advanced substantially by the evolutive interpretation of international protection instruments."¹¹⁹ The U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples represents the most recent statement by the international community on the human rights ¹¹⁴ See Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Advisory Opinion OC-10/89 "Interpretation of the Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man within the Framework of Article 64 of the American Convention on Human Rights", July 14, 1989, paras. 35-45.

¹¹⁵ Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas, supra note 108, at paras. 29-30 (citing Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the "Mapiripan Massacre," Judgment of September 15, 2005, para. 111).

¹¹⁶ IACHR, Mary & Carrie Dann v. United States, Report No. 75/02, December 27, 2002 pp. 24-25.

¹¹⁷ American Declaration, Art. I, XVIII.

¹¹⁸ Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas, supra note 108, at 82-85.

¹¹⁹ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Street Children (Villagran Morales et al.) v. Guatemala, Judgment of November 19, 1999, para.193.

of Indigenous peoples, and its consideration by the Commission would further the evolution of human rights law within the Inter-American system.

The U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples places additional obligations on states to protect Indian women from violence. Article 22 states,

1. Particular attention shall be paid to the rights and special needs of indigenous elders, women, youth, children and persons with disabilities in the implementation of this Declaration.

2. States shall take measures, in conjunction with indigenous peoples, to ensure that all indigenous women and children enjoy the full protection and guarantees against all forms of violence and discrimination.¹²⁰

As the most recent statement of international customary law on the rights of Indigenous peoples, the Declaration reflects growing international consensus that Indian women have a right to be free from violence and that states must take special precautions to ensure the safety of Indian women from violence. The Commission should ensure these explicit protections for Indian women in the United States.

- i. The United States is Responsible for the Epidemic of Violence Against Indian Women because It Has Failed to Prevent such Violence and Act with Due Diligence to Protect Them.

The United States is responsible for the epidemic of violence against Indian women because it has failed to prevent this violence and act with due diligence to protect them. The American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man places legal obligations on the United States to protect, promote, and ensure human rights.¹²¹ The Commission has explained that states must meet the due diligence standard in preventing violence against women.¹²² Within the ¹²⁰ U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, G.A. Res. 61/295, U.N. Doc. A/RES/47/1, Art. 22 (2007) [hereinafter “U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples”].

¹²¹ See Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Advisory Opinion OC-10/89 “Interpretation of the Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man within the Framework of Article 64 of the American Convention on Human Rights”, July 14, 1989, paras. 35-45.

¹²² Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas, supra note 108, at paras. 29-30.

Inter-American system, states can be held responsible for human rights violations perpetrated by non-state actors when they do not act with due diligence in response to acts of violence.¹²³

International human rights law has widely accepted that states must act with due diligence to prevent human rights violations, including violence against women. Several international human rights courts, including the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, have repeatedly held that states must exercise due diligence to prevent human rights violations.¹²⁴ The Court has clearly established that a violation of rights occurs if the government supports or acquiesces in the act, or if the state has allowed the act to take place without taking measures to prevent it or to punish those responsible.¹²⁵ Article 7 of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women imposes the duty of due diligence on states parties.¹²⁶ Customary international law also “obligates states to prevent and respond to acts of violence against women with due diligence.”¹²⁷

The United States has failed to act with due diligence because despite its knowledge of the epidemic of violence against Indian women, it has left Indian women and Indian nations with little to no recourse against perpetrators of domestic violence. In this enforcement environment, perpetrators can act with impunity on Indian lands. The United States’ restriction of tribal jurisdiction combined with its failure to effectively police and prosecute these violent crimes violates its obligation to act with due diligence to protect, promote, and ensure human rights under the American Declaration. Further, these actions by the United States negatively impact ¹²³ Id. (citing Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the “Mapiripan Massacre,” Judgment of September 15, 2005, para. 111).

¹²⁴ See, e.g., Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Velásquez Rodríguez Case, Judgment of July 29, 1988.; Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Massacre of Pueblo Bello, Judgment of January 31, 2006, para. 124. See also European Ct. H.R., Kilic v. Turkey, Judgment of March 28, 2000, paras. 62-63; European Ct. H.R., Osman v. United Kingdom, Judgment of October 28, 1998.

¹²⁵ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of Velásquez-Rodríguez v. Honduras, Judgment of July 29, 1988, para. 173.

¹²⁶ Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women, Art. 7 (1994), available at [<http://www.oas.org/cim/english/Convention%20Violence%20Against%20Women.htm>].

¹²⁷ Report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, The Due Diligence Standard as a Tool for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, E/CN.4/2006/61 (20 Jan. 2006) at para. 29.

entire Indian nations, which already suffer from the worst socio-economic status of any population in the United States.¹²⁸ United States laws have allowed state actors to create a law enforcement void that condones violence against Indian women and permits perpetrators to act with impunity on Indian lands.

Because of this law enforcement void, the primary recourse that Indian nations and Indian women have against non-Indian perpetrators of domestic violence is civil protection orders. The United States Supreme Court's decision in Gonzales undermines the protection of Indian women by giving state law enforcement officials the discretion not to enforce valid protection orders against domestic violence perpetrators when there is probable cause to believe the order is being violated. This decision leaves Indian women largely unprotected from continuing domestic violence and shows that the United States has failed to act with due diligence to remedy this dire situation.

ii. The United States Violates Indian Women's Rights to Life and Security of Person under Article I of the American Declaration.

The right to life is universally recognized as one of the most important human rights, and is included in almost every international human rights document. The full exercise of the right to life is essential for the exercise of all other human rights.¹²⁹ Article I of the American Declaration protects the right of every human being "to life, liberty, and the security of his person."¹³⁰ Both the Commission and the Inter-American Court have interpreted the right to extend beyond arbitrary deprivations of life by the state or its agents.¹³¹ The right to life may be implicated in situations that do not necessarily result in death because it places a positive ¹²⁸ Guide for Practitioners, supra note 13, at 11 (stating that "American Indian and Alaska Natives are 2.5 times more likely than the rest of the population to live in poverty" and that "45 percent of Native persons live at or below the poverty level").

¹²⁹ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Street Children (Villagran Morales et al.) v. Guatemala, Judgment of November 19, 1999, para. 144.

¹³⁰ American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, Art. I.

¹³¹ See, e.g., IACHR, Parque São Lucas v. Brasil, Case 10.301, Report No. 40/03 (2003).

obligation on states to create conditions that “discourage any threat to the right to life” and ensure a dignified existence.¹³² For example, in the Sawhoyamaxa case, the Inter-American Court found that Paraguay had violated the right to life of members of an Indigenous community because of the inadequate living conditions faced by the community and the failure of the state to adopt necessary measures to remedy those conditions.¹³³

Other international human rights instruments, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights¹³⁴ and the American Convention on Human Rights,¹³⁵ also protect the right to life. The right to life has consistently been interpreted as including the guarantee to be free from violence.¹³⁶ Further, Article 4 of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women includes the rights to life and security of the person as rights to be protected.¹³⁷

The U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples expressly extends the right to a life free from violence to Indian women. Article 7 specifically protects the rights to life and personal security of Indigenous persons. It states,

1. Indigenous individuals have the rights to life, physical and mental integrity, liberty and security of the person.
2. Indigenous peoples have the collective right to live in freedom, peace and security as distinct peoples and shall not be subjected to any act of genocide or any other act of violence.¹³⁸

¹³² Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Street Children (Villagran Morales et al.) v. Guatemala, Judgment of November 19, 1999, para. 144.

¹³³ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Sawhoyamaxa Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Judgment of March 29, 2006, para. 156, 166.

¹³⁴ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, G.A. Res. 217A (III), U.N. Doc. A/810 at 71 Art. 3. (1948).

¹³⁵ American Convention on Human Rights, O.A.S. Treaty Series No. 36,1144, U.N.T.S. 123, entered into force July 18, 1978, Art. 4 [hereinafter “American Convention on Human Rights”].

¹³⁶ See, e.g., Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination Against Women, General Recommendation No. 19, at ¶ 8, U.N. Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev. 1/Add.10 (2000); G.A., Res. A/Res/58/147 (2004).

¹³⁷ Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women, Art. 4 (1994), available at [<http://www.oas.org/cim/english/Convention%20Violence%20Against%20Women.htm>].

¹³⁸ U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, Art. 7.

Under international human rights law, the right to life includes the right to be free from violence. Thus, the United States has an affirmative obligation to protect the rights to life and personal security of Indian women.

An Indian woman is the victim of sexual and physical abuse every hour of every day.¹³⁹ The vast majority of Indian women will have their lives interrupted by violence. The United States condones this violence by unilaterally maintaining jurisdictional constraints on tribal criminal prosecutions and by refusing to ensure the enforcement of civil protection orders by state law enforcement.¹⁴⁰

The United States' failure to enforce civil protection orders undermines the rights to life and personal security of the holder of the protection order because it subjects her to the constant threat of ongoing violence. If her attacker approaches her, she has no guarantee that the state will prevent another attack. Her rights to life and personal security are constantly in jeopardy; she lives in fear of another attack and cannot enjoy her life. Further, the United States' failure to ensure the enforcement of civil protection orders allows perpetrators of violence to act with impunity. Because state law enforcement is not required to enforce protection orders and often does not, perpetrators know that they are free to victimize and revictimize Indian women. Often perpetrators escalate their attacks after a woman obtains a protection order, and the attacks become lethal. When the United States does not require law enforcement officials to enforce protection orders, Indian women can be lethally harmed.

¹³⁹ Long Brief, supra note 6, at 4.

¹⁴⁰ Goldfarb, supra note 94, at 1516 (“Even though obtaining a protection order may be valuable in and of itself, the fact remains that to achieve their full potential, orders must be properly enforced.”).

iii. The United States Does Not Provide Indian Women with an Effective Judicial Remedy as Required by the American Declaration.

Article XVIII of the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man states, “Every person may resort to the courts to ensure respect for his legal rights. There should likewise be available to him a simple, brief procedure whereby the courts will protect him from acts of authority that, to his prejudice, violate any fundamental constitutional rights.”¹⁴¹ Article 25 of the American Convention on Human Rights also ensures the right to an effective judicial remedy,¹⁴² and Article 7 of the American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence Against Women lists the establishment of “fair and effective legal procedures,” including protective measures, for women that have been subjected to violence among the duties of states parties.¹⁴³

The U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples explicitly protects the rights of Indian women to effective judicial remedies in Article 40. Article 40 states,

Indigenous peoples have the right to access to and prompt decision through just and fair procedures for the resolution of conflicts and disputes with States or other parties, as well as to effective remedies for all infringements of their individual and collective rights. Such a decision shall give due consideration to the customs, traditions, rules and legal systems of the indigenous peoples concerned and international human rights.¹⁴⁴

Under international law, the United States has a legal obligation to provide Indian women with an effective judicial remedy when their rights are violated.

¹⁴¹ American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, Art. XVII.

¹⁴² American Convention on Human Rights, Art. 25.

¹⁴³ Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women, Art. 7 (1994), available at [<http://www.oas.org/cim/english/Convention%20Violence%20Against%20Women.htm>].

¹⁴⁴ The United States violates not only the rights of Indian women to an effective remedy as protected under the American Declaration and the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous peoples but also fails to give due consideration to the legal systems of tribes in limiting their criminal jurisdiction and restricting their ability to protect Indian women. These limitations violate Article 34, as well as Article 40, of the U.N. Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Article 34 declares, “Indigenous peoples have the right to promote, develop and maintain their institutional structures and their distinctive customs, spirituality, traditions, procedures, practices and, in the cases where they exist, juridical systems or customs, in accordance with international human rights standards.”

The Inter-American Court has a well-established jurisprudence on the right to an effective judicial remedy.¹⁴⁵ In Velasquez Rodriguez v. Honduras, the Court stated that an adequate, effective judicial remedy must suitably address the infringement of a legal right and effectively protect the right.¹⁴⁶ The Court has also found that the effective remedy must be provided on a non-discriminatory basis.¹⁴⁷ A remedy must be effective in practice, and may become ineffective when practice has shown the ineffectiveness of the remedy.¹⁴⁸

The Inter-American Commission adopted the Inter-American Court's jurisprudence on effective judicial remedies in the case of Maria da Penha Maia Fernandes v. Brasil.¹⁴⁹ In that case, the Commission interpreted Article XVIII of the American Declaration in conjunction with Articles 8 (right to fair trial) and 25 (judicial protection) of the American Convention.¹⁵⁰ The Commission incorporated the jurisprudence of the Inter-American Court in explaining the obligations of states, including the obligation to take measures to prevent violations of rights.¹⁵¹

The Commission then found that Brasil had violated the petitioner's right to justice under Article XVIII of the American Declaration because it had failed to properly investigate and prosecute Maria da Penha Maia Fernandes' husband after he tried to kill her and left her paralyzed.¹⁵² The Commission explained,

The failure to prosecute and convict the perpetrator under these circumstances is an indication that the State condones the violence suffered by Maria da Penha, and this failure by the Brazilian courts to take action is exacerbating the direct ¹⁴⁵ See, e.g., Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of the Mayagna (Sumo) Awas Tingni Community v. Nicaragua, Judgment of August 31, 2001, para. 112 (calling the right to an effective remedy "one of the basic mainstays, not only of the American Convention, but also of the Rule of Law in a democratic society").

¹⁴⁶ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Case of Velasquez-Rodriguez v. Honduras, Judgment of July 29, 1988, paras. 64, 66.

¹⁴⁷ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Workers, Advisory Opinion, Sept. 13, 2003, para. 107.

¹⁴⁸ Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Judicial Guarantees in States of Emergency, Advisory Opinion, Oct. 6, 1987, para. 24.

¹⁴⁹ IACHR, Maria da Penha v. Brasil, Case 12.051, Report No. 54/01, OEA/Ser.L/V/II.111 Doc. 20 rev. at 704 (April 16, 2001).

¹⁵⁰ Id.

¹⁵¹ Id. at para. 42.

¹⁵² Id. at para. 60.

consequences of the aggression by her ex-husband. Furthermore, as has been demonstrated earlier, that tolerance by the State organs is not limited to this case; rather, it is a pattern. The condoning of this situation by the entire system only serves to perpetuate the psychological, social, and historical roots and factors that sustain and encourage violence against women.¹⁵³

It continued, “That general and discriminatory judicial ineffectiveness also creates a climate that is conducive to domestic violence, since society sees no evidence of willingness by the State, as the representative of the society, to take effective action to sanction such acts.”¹⁵⁴

The United States, like Brasil in the Maria da Penha case, condones violence against women, particularly violence against Indian women. The criminal jurisdictional scheme created by the United States leaves Indian women without meaningful recourse against their abusers. Indian women are effectively denied justice because the United States, which has sole jurisdiction over non-Indian abusers, refuses to prosecute them, and its laws prevent Indian nations from adequately punishing Indian abusers. The United States perpetrates further injustice on Indian women by not requiring states to enforce tribal protection orders when there is probable cause of a violation. The Supreme Court’s decision in Gonzales enables law enforcement to ignore protection orders, and allows perpetrators of domestic violence to revictimize their victims with impunity.

While the Maria da Penha case did not address the obligations of states to engage in precautionary measures as such, the Inter-American Commission has interpreted the right to judicial protection to include the right to seek effective precautionary protection. According to the Commission, “the right to judicial protection creates an obligation for the states to establish and guarantee appropriate and effective judicial remedies for the precautionary protection of ¹⁵³ Id. at para. 55.

¹⁵⁴ IACHR, Maria da Penha v. Brasil, Case 12.051, Report No. 54/01, OEA/Ser.L/V/II.111 Doc. 20 rev. at 704, para. 56 (April 16, 2001).

rights, including life and physical integrity, at the local level.”¹⁵⁵ It further explained, “while in criminal law a threat against life only constitutes an offense upon initiation of the execution of the crime, in a precautionary situation, the protection of the right to life should include protection against any act that threatens that right, regardless of the magnitude or degree of probability of the threat, so long as it is genuine.”¹⁵⁶

The United States is not ensuring Indian women’s rights to effective judicial protection. Earlier this year, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed grave concerns about the United States’ response to violence against women in its Concluding Observations and Report.¹⁵⁷ The Report stated,

The Committee also notes with concern that the alleged insufficient will of federal and state authorities to take action with regard to such violence and abuse often deprives victims belonging to racial, ethnic and national minorities, and in particular Native American women, of their right to access to justice and the right to obtain adequate reparation or satisfaction for damages suffered. (Articles 5(b) and 6).¹⁵⁸

CERD also recommended that the United States increase its efforts to prevent and prosecute perpetrators of violence against women.¹⁵⁹ The United States has yet to comply with CERD’s recommendations.

The United States has a duty to take appropriate precautionary measures to protect Indian women from violence. If the United States is not going to prosecute domestic abusers committing offenses on Indian lands or allow Indian nations to do so adequately, the very least it can do is ensure that tribal protection orders are enforced by state law enforcement. But under

¹⁵⁵ IACHR, Report on Access to Justice for Women Victims of Violence in the Americas, OEA/Ser.L/VIII, Jan. 20, 2007, p. 24 (citing IACHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders in the Americas, OEA/Ser.L/V/II.124, March 7, 2006, pp. 35-36.)

¹⁵⁶ Id. at p. 25.

¹⁵⁷ Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, Concluding Observations United States of America, CERD/C/USA/CO/6 (February 2008) at para. 26, available at [<http://www.indianlaw.org/sites/indianlaw.org/files/CERD-recommendations.pdf>].

¹⁵⁸ Id.

¹⁵⁹ Id.

Gonzales, the United States has refused to even do that. The United States Supreme Court's decision in Gonzales renders domestic violence protection orders ineffective because it does not require the enforcement of these orders. The situation of Indian women in the United States is especially grave because often the only recourse they have is a civil protection order. The lack of enforcement of these orders makes them useless. It leaves Indian women vulnerable to further attack and without any judicial remedy against their abusers.

IV. Conclusion and Recommendations

Domestic violence is an acute problem in the United States. Despite this, as the Gonzales case demonstrates, United States laws fail to protect domestic violence victims from ongoing violence. Because of Gonzales, law enforcement can always choose not to enforce domestic violence protection orders and leave women vulnerable to future abuse. This decision has a particularly pernicious impact on Indian women because the problem of domestic violence has reached epidemic proportions and many times, the primary recourse that Indian women have against their attackers is a protection order.

The United States has failed to fulfill its international legal obligations to women, particularly Indian women. It has failed to protect their rights to life, security of the person, freedom from violence, and an effective judicial remedy by not requiring that protection orders be enforced against domestic violence perpetrators. United States laws disproportionately affect Indian women because the United States' limitations on tribal jurisdiction leave them with limited legal remedies heightening the importance of civil protection orders. United States laws undermine the integrity of these protection orders and promote violence against Indian women by not ensuring their enforcement by law enforcement when there is probable cause to believe that they have been violated.

In consideration of the foregoing, Amici Curiae request that this Honorable Commission:

1. Declare that the United States is internationally responsible for a widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration.
2. Issue a report in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommend that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies.
3. Recommend that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by:
 - a. assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands;
 - b. implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and
 - i. ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders;
 - ii. permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases;
 - iii. ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and
 - iv. ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender provision under section 909;
 - c. requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands;
 - d. establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women;
 - e. working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women;
AND
 - f. establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

Dated: November 13, 2008

Respectfully Submitted:

Lucy Simpson
Kirsten Matoy Carlson
Indian Law Resource Center
602 North Ewing Avenue
Helena, MT 59601

Jacqueline Agtuca
Terri Henry
Sacred Circle National Resource Center to End Violence Against Native Women
722 St. Joseph Street
Rapid City, SD 57701

Counsel for Amici Curiae

APPENDIX

STATEMENTS OF AMICI CURIAE

The following organizations respectfully submit this brief as Amici Curiae in support of the petitioner.

The Indian Law Resource Center is a non-profit law and advocacy organization established and directed by American Indians. We provide legal assistance to indigenous nations in the United States and throughout the Americas who are working to protect their lands, resources, human rights, environment and cultural heritage. Our mission is to overcome the devastating problems that threaten Native peoples by advancing the rule of law, by establishing national and international legal standards that preserve their human rights and dignity, and by challenging the governments of the world to equally esteem all human beings. The Center has successfully represented indigenous peoples from Nicaragua, Belize, and the United States before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, and played a crucial role in the drafting and adoption of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Our Safe Women, Strong Nations project collaborates with tribes and Native women's organizations to raise awareness of violence against Native women as an international human rights issue. Indian women, like all other women in the United States, should be able to seek judicial recourse against their abusers, including criminal prosecution and adequate sentencing by their tribal government and the enforcement of tribal protection orders. The United States needs to increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women.

Sacred Circle, National Resource Center to End Violence Against Native Women is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the state of South Dakota in 1996 (www.sacred-circle.com). The mission of Sacred Circle is to change individual and institutional beliefs that support violence against all women. Sacred Circle provides technical assistance, training, and consultation to Indian Tribes and organizations in the development of strategies and responses to violence against women. Sacred Circle has been involved with tribal law enforcement, prosecution and courts in the development of best practices in domestic violence and sexual assault response. Sacred Circle continues to formulate new approaches and innovative legal and program response on a tribal, state, and national level to create solutions to ending domestic violence. Sacred Circle was instrumental in providing information about the outrageous rates of violence against Indian women and making recommendations that led to the enactment of Title IX, Safety for Indian Women in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

The Alaska Native Women's Coalition (ANWC) is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the State of Alaska in 2001 (www.aknwc.org). The mission of ANWC is to provide advocacy and services to women seeking safety and services through our program. Our program serves approximately 800 native and non-native women per year. As direct service providers, we routinely work with the tribal court and other tribal justice system components to enhance the safety of Indian and non-Indian women seeking relief through tribal court civil jurisdiction. We have worked tirelessly to help educate communities, tribes, law enforcement and others on the importance of the enactment of Title IX, Safety for Indian Women in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. Through this act, protection of Indian Women who are victimized at much higher rate in this country, have some level of protection by legally mandating civil remedies such as protection orders across jurisdictions (i.e. tribal, state or federal).

ANWC requests the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the “Written Comments of Amicus Curiae” brief presented by the Indian Law Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) a recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; and, (2) a recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women.

The Battered Women’s Justice Project (BWJP) is a non-profit, national resource center that provides training and assistance for advocates, battered women, legal and justice system personnel, policymakers and others engaged in the justice system response to domestic violence. The BWJP promotes systemic change within community organizations and governmental agencies engaged in the civil and criminal justice response to domestic violence, in order to hold these institutions accountable for the safety and security of battered women and their children. The BWJP is an affiliated member of the Domestic Violence Resource Network, a group of national resource centers funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and other support since 1993. The BWJP also serves as a designated technical assistance provider for the Office on Violence Against Women of the U.S. Department of Justice.

The BWJP requests that the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the “Written Comments of Amicus Curiae” brief presented by the Indian Law Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their right under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this brief, and the recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process and effective remedies as a means of strengthening the domestic initiative to hold the United States accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian Nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of trial leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensure that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provisions of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing all civil protection orders and specifically trial court protection orders; (ii) permit Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking, to fully access federal and state criminal databases; (iii) ensure enforcement of firearms possession prohibitions as including tribal law convictions under section 908; (iv) ensure enforcement of the domestic assault by habitual offender provision under section 909; and (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons charged with and/or convicted of crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women.

Cangleska, Inc., is a not-for-profit and tribally chartered organization incorporated in the state of South Dakota and the Oglala Sioux Tribe in 1996 and 1997, respectively. The organization operates within the exterior boundaries of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and is composed of Oglala tribal members. The mission of Cangleska, Inc., is to create individual and institutional change necessary to support ending violence against native women. Cangleska, Inc., operates in four locations across the reservation and provides a multitude of programs including two shelters for women who are battered and their children, domestic violence probation services, outreach advocacy, men's re-education, women's treatment, supervised visitation, and civil legal services. Cangleska attorneys and advocates assist native and non-native women who seek legal protections through various tribal court systems throughout the region. Cangleska is nationally known for its innovative programs and work to end violence against women.

Cangleska, Inc., requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: : (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

Clan Star, Inc. (CSI) is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in 2001 (www.clanstar.org). The mission of Clan Star is devoted to improving justice to strengthen the sovereignty of Indigenous women through legal, legislative and policy initiatives, and, education and awareness. Clan Star provides technical assistance, training and consultation to Indian Tribes and organizations in the development of public policy strategies addressing violence against women. CSI was instrumental in the development of public policy that led to the enactment of Title IX, Safety for Indian Women in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. Clan Star provided advocacy and expert testimony on violence against Indigenous women in response to the United States Report to the UN Commission on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (UNCERD) earlier this year in Geneva, Switzerland. Over the past 13 years since the implementation of VAWA, Tribes have developed the infrastructure for tribal justice system components to provide safety to women within tribal jurisdiction. Many tribal domestic violence codes have been developed. Personnel and training of tribal law enforcement, tribal courts, prosecution, probation and batterers treatment program personnel have been supported. At the tribal level, efforts are coordinated to create a system of safety for women seeking safety and protection within the tribal jurisdiction.

CSI requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by a habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The La Jolla Indian Tribe (the “Tribe”), a federally recognized Indian tribe, is devoted to improving justice to strengthen the sovereignty of Indigenous women through legal, legislative and policy initiatives, education and awareness.

The tribe requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The Legal Momentum, a not-for-profit organization, advances the rights of women and girls by using the power of the law and creating innovative public policy. Legal Momentum advocates in the courts, Congress and state legislatures, as well as with unions and private business, to improve the protection afforded victims of domestic and sexual violence, and is a leading authority on the rights of immigrant victims of such violence.

Legal Momentum has filed a separate amicus in this matter, but is persuaded that the incidence of sexual and domestic violence perpetrated against American Indian and Alaska Native women is of such magnitude that we must lend our support by participating as amicus in this brief as well. Legal Momentum was instrumental in the enactment of the federal Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and its reauthorizations, which sought to redress the historical inadequacy of the justice system's response to domestic and sexual violence, and specifically advocated for appropriate legal protections for Indian Women in VAWA and in other legislation. On several occasions, Legal Momentum has litigated cases and submitted amicus curiae briefs to the Court regarding the rights of victims of domestic and sexual violence. See, e.g., United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000); see also Davis v. Washington and Hammon v. Indiana, 547 U.S. 813 (2006); Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales, 545 U.S. 748 (2005).

Legal Momentum recommends that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian land, and that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909.

Mending the Sacred Hoop, Inc. (MSH) is a Minnesota non-profit organization committed to strengthening the voices and vision of Native peoples. We work to end violence against Native women and children while restoring the safety, sovereignty, and sacredness of Native women. The safety and sovereignty of women is the core of our work; we carry in our hearts the understanding passed on to us by our ancestors—the inherent status of Native women as sacred. Our work to restore this status focuses on the elimination of all forms of violence against Native women. We work from a social change perspective that relies on the grassroots efforts of all our relations to restore the leadership of Native women. Mending the Sacred Hoop provides training, support, resources, and leadership to tribal communities across the country in the development of programs to protect the safety and sovereignty of Native women. Over the past 13 years since the implementation of VAWA, Tribes have developed the infrastructure for tribal justice system components to provide safety to women within tribal jurisdiction. Many tribal domestic violence codes have been developed. Personnel and training of tribal law enforcement, tribal courts, prosecutors, probation and batterers treatment program personnel have been supported. At the tribal level, we have coordinated our efforts and worked to enhance the response towards Native women who are seeking safety and protection within our tribal jurisdictions.

MSH requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the State of Texas in 1998. The mission of the National Center is to design, provide and customize training and consultation; influence policy, promote collaboration; and enhance diversity with the goal of ending domestic and sexual violence. Our agency provides technical assistance to approximately three million visitors to our web site, www.ncdsv.org per year and provides 36 training events per year. Our work has also included consultation with the Red Nacional de Mexico, the network of shelters and service providers working to end domestic and sexual violence in Mexico.

The NCDSV requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The National Congress of American Indians ("NCAI") is the oldest and largest national organization addressing the interests of Indian tribal governments, representing more than 250 American Indian Tribes and Alaskan Native villages. Dedicated to protecting the rights and improving the welfare of American Indians, NCAI has a firm commitment to effective law enforcement in Indian country, believing that maintenance of law and order is a fundamental responsibility of tribal governments, with cooperation and assistance from both federal and state governments. NCAI also has a firm commitment to the view that tribal governments must be free to exercise their sovereign power, without undue state interference, to preserve the political integrity and core dignity of Tribes and to ensure the success of the federal policy of tribal self-determination. NCAI has non-governmental status with the United Nations.

The National Organization of Sisters of Color Ending Sexual Assault (SCESA) is a women of color-led nonprofit dedicated to working with our communities to create a just society in which Women of Color are able to live healthy lives free of violence.

SCESA requests that the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the "Written Comments of Amicus Curiae" brief presented by the Indian Law Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (2) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; and (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women.

As an organization committed to ending violence in the lives of all women we understand that for Communities of Color, such as Native Communities we recognize and support a coordinated and effective response to ending violence against women.

The OhitikaNajin Win Oti is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in South Dakota in 2008. The mission of the program is to provide advocacy and services to women seeking safety. Our program serves approximately 250 women annually. As direct service providers, we routinely work with the tribal court and other tribal justice system components to enhance the safety of Indian and non-Indian women seeking relief through our tribal court's civil jurisdiction.

Our Sister's Keeper Coalition (OSKC) is a non-profit, non-governmental coalition incorporated in the states of Colorado and was founded in May of 2006. The central office of the OSK is located on the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado. OSK assists victims of domestic violence and sexual assault within the state of Colorado. The preference of OSK is to assist Native American victims, but OSK never denies services to anyone who seeks our assistance. The goals and objectives is to ensure the safety and sovereignty of Native American victims of domestic violence and sexual assault.

The Pauma Band of Mission Indians (the "Tribe"), a federally recognized Indian Tribe, is devoted to improving justice to strengthen the sovereignty of Indigenous women through legal, legislative and policy initiatives, education and awareness.

The Tribe requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and that the United States continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration, would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the United States accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and a recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the United States accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation, as mandated by Section 903 of Title IX, and by (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking to enter information into and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under Section 908 of Title IX; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under Section 909 of Title IX; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit all declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has criminal jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing, in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations, a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The Qualla Women's Justice Alliance is a group of Cherokee and other tribal women that are formally recognized by Cherokee Tribal Council Resolution No. 68 (1999). The Qualla Women's Justice Alliance is committed to improving the response of the Cherokee tribal justice system and coordination of direct service providers to victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, stalking and dating violence on Cherokee trust lands located in Cherokee, North Carolina. The Alliance provides leadership and, more importantly, Cherokee cultural perspective to the non-Indians that are employed by our tribe, are the actual direct service providers, and who reside on our lands. Likewise, our tribal lands have been and continue to be visited by thousands of tourists and visitors each year since the 1940's.

The Alliance requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The Shelter of Safety (SOS) is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in 2006. Shelter of Safety, Inc., is a native specific Domestic Violence Transitional Housing Program located on the Qualla Boundary in Cherokee, NC. The primary goal of SOS is to fill the current gap between crisis shelter and permanent housing on our tribal lands and create public awareness. This program provides stable transitional housing and support services to battered women. Housing is essential to securing safe and healthy lives on and around the Eastern Band of Cherokee Qualla Boundary.

The SOS requests the Inter-American Commission issue the following: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (8) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The Tribal Law and Policy Institute (TLPI) (www.tlpi.org) is an Indian owned and operated non-profit corporation organized to design and deliver education, research, training, and technical assistance programs which promote the improvement of justice in Indian country and the health, well-being, and culture of Native peoples. TLPI has an extensive track record concerning the effective provision of training and technical assistance in Indian Country, especially training and technical assistance addressing violence against Native women issues. Hindering the civil jurisdiction of tribal courts over non-Indians will endanger women who are served by the direct service provider programs that are the focus of our training and technical assistance services. These direct service providers routinely work with the tribal court and other tribal justice system components to enhance the safety of Indian and non-Indian women seeking relief through our tribal court's civil jurisdiction.

White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. (WBCWS) is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in the State of South Dakota in 1978. The mission of White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. is to provide advocacy and services to women seeking safety and services through our agency. Our agency provides services to approximately 400 women and 800 children per year. A finding that tribal courts lack jurisdiction over non-Indians could endanger women that we serve. As a grassroots woman's organization located on the Rosebud Sioux Reservation in the state of South Dakota, we work with tribal woman and non-Indian woman who seek services from us. Our agency routinely works with the tribal court and other tribal justice system components to enhance the safety of Indian and non-Indian women seeking relief through our tribal court's civil jurisdiction. With the passage of the Full Faith and Credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act in 1994, Congress codified the constitutional principle that courts in one jurisdiction must honor civil protection orders from other jurisdictions. The FFC provision clarified that tribal courts had the authority to issue civil protection orders and have the authority to enforce such orders, either from another tribe or state, as their own local law permitted. A finding that Tribal Courts have no civil jurisdiction over non-Indians will severely curtail the authority of tribal courts to enter civil orders against non-Indians, thus removing life-saving protection order remedies, including divorce decrees, child custody issues, etc. The White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. provides services in a five county area which are Todd, Mellette, Tripp, Gregory and Lyman. White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. has utilized the FFC provision to successfully obtain protection orders when women from these counties who are fleeing from their perpetrators, seeking shelter for their safety off the parameters of the Rosebud Sioux Reservation or their small rural town on other tribal reservations or in the larger cities. In addition, the FFC provision has protected our children, as our tribal court honors the provisions regarding custody of children in tribal domestic violence custody orders. The provision ensures that tribes that are often hundreds of miles apart the time necessary to investigate custody issues.

The WBCWS requests the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the "Written Comments of Amicus Curiae" brief presented by the Indian Law

Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing state accountability for the prevention, investigation, prosecution, and punishment of sexual and physical violence against Indian women in states where the state has jurisdiction over these crimes, and in particular, addressing the unique circumstances of Alaska Native women; (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by working in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations to establish appropriate tribal criminal jurisdiction and sentencing authority over all persons for crimes of sexual and domestic violence committed against Indian women; and, (7) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The Women Spirit Coalition (WSC) is a not-for-profit organization incorporated in Washington State in 2005. (www.womenspiritcoalition.org). The mission of WSC is devoted to improving justice to strengthen the sovereignty of Indigenous women through legal, legislative and policy initiatives, and, education and awareness. WSC provides technical assistance, training and consultation to Indian Tribes and organizations in the development of public policy strategies addressing violence against women.

WSC requests the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the “Written Comments of Amicus Curiae” brief presented by the Indian Law Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) A declaration by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights that the United States is internationally responsible for the widespread and consistent pattern of human rights violations based on the perpetuation of domestic and sexual violence against women, particularly Indian women, and continues to violate the rights of women, including their rights under Articles I and XVII of the American Declaration would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (2) A report issued in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission’s Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; (3) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by assisting Indian nations in their efforts to respond to, prevent, prosecute, and punish perpetrators of sexual and physical violence against women within Indian lands; (4) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909; (5) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by requiring personnel of the Department of Justice, including law enforcement and U.S. Attorneys, to submit declination reports to tribal justice officials and to coordinate the prosecution of sexual and domestic assault cases on Indian lands; and, (6) A recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by establishing in consultation and cooperation with Indian nations a national reporting system to investigate and prosecute cases of missing and murdered Indian women.

The mission of the YWCA Clark County is to build a community of peace, justice, freedom, and dignity for all people. The YWCA focuses on empowering women, preventing violence and eliminating oppression. Over 10,000 people are served each year, including victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and child abuse; youth aging out of foster care; homeless preschool children; and women in jail.

The YWCA Clark County requests the Inter-American Commission follow all recommendations as requested in the “Written Comments of Amicus Curiae” brief presented by the Indian Law Resource Center and Sacred Circle, and in particular: (1) Issue a report in accordance with Article 43.2 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure in the most expedited manner possible, incorporating into that report the findings in point (1) of this section, and recommendation that the United States provide legal and programmatic reform to comport with the standards of international human rights law on violence against women, due process, and effective remedies would strengthen the domestic initiative to hold the USA accountable to the spirit and letter of the Violence Against Women Act of 2006; and (2) Issue a recommendation that the United States, in consultation and cooperation with the Indian nations, increase its efforts to prevent and punish violence and abuse against women by implementing fully the Violence Against Women Act by following the recommendations of tribal leaders at the annual consultation as mandated by section 903 of Title IX of the Violence Against Women Act, and (i) ensuring that state authorities comply with the full faith and credit provision of the Violence Against Women Act by recognizing and effectively enforcing tribal court protection orders; (ii) permitting Indian law enforcement agencies, in cases of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, to enter information into, and obtain information from federal criminal data bases; (iii) ensuring enforcement of the firearms possession prohibition that includes tribal law convictions under section 908; and (iv) ensuring enforcement of the domestic assault by an habitual offender under section 909.